Building Your Child's Wardrobe

For children and teens

The point of this page isn't really the clothes. It is giving your child a chance to make real decisions about what they wear, inside limits you've already set, and watching what happens to their confidence when they get to own the choice. That is a small thing that turns into a big one over the years.

Set the limits up front — the categories, the climate, the budget, whatever else matters in your home — and then let them work inside those limits without you reaching in to fix it.

Decisions the Child Owns

Decision	Their choice
Colors they want to build around
Pieces they want to wear most often
Pieces they're ready to let go of
What they want to save up for

A Note for Parents

Let them choose, even when the outfit isn't what you would have picked. Ownership is the point, and they grow into it faster than you'd expect.
