The Mostly-Right Card

The failures that matter aren't the obvious fabrications — they're the answers that are eighty percent correct and confident about all of it. Before acting on anything that matters, four questions. Keep this card next to the CALM card.

Does this fit what I already know, or does something snag? _____

Does it flatten a messy topic into a conclusion that arrived a little too easily? _____

Where's the line between established finding and interpretation? (Ask directly: What's well established, what remains debated, and where do experts disagree?) _____

Stakes check: low stakes — refine and keep moving. High stakes — first draft; verify elsewhere before acting. This one is: _____
